It is not clear how the authors justify the use of the term "new" in the title of the paper. The authors state that the paper is a "new" contribution to the literature, but they do not provide any evidence to support this claim. ## Vigilance

I have been reading the news about the recent surge in kidnappings in the Philippines. It is a disturbing trend that has been going on for some time now. The police are doing their best to catch the perpetrators, but it seems like they are not getting ahead. The families of the victims are suffering, and the public is becoming more and more fearful. We need to take more vigilance to protect our children and our communities.

By Marjorie Ong

MANILA — The city of Manila, known for its rich history and culture, continues to embrace its traditions. One of the most significant religious observances in the city is the Senakulo, a dramatic reenactment of the life and death of Jesus Christ. This year, the Senakulo is being held in a more modern setting, reflecting the city's adaptation to contemporary times. The event is a testament to the enduring faith and cultural heritage of the Filipino people.

Whine no more, my sweet

I found people who found something to complain about everywhere I walked. I was so tired, I didn't want to

by Michelle

One day I was walking down the street and I saw a man who was looking at the ground. He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

He was looking at the ground and he was looking at the ground.

100 days of compassion

enabling me to leave without affecting a significant other in an emotional way," he says.

From London to Thailand

Although he had saved up for a trip to London for 18 months, he decided to change his travel plans and go to Thailand instead, not minding that the fare would double.

After following his doctor's orders of working for his communication skills to take a significant effect, Mickey left for Thailand, but not without saying goodbye to his beloved dog, first. Mickey will carry a photo of her wherever he goes.

He traveled to Thailand in the hopes of doing the jobs nobody else wanted to.

"Surviving one month after the great wave struck, I figured that those relief workers who were here from the start may be experiencing some degree of burnout, and my aim was to help in any way I could. I was prepared to give my all."

Mickey was ready for anything. In fact, he left a will before leaving Washington State, just in case something happened.

It was Mickey's first time in Thailand. "All that I had heard on the media was Phuket, Phuket, Phuket. After a couple of days of acclimation in Bangkok, I took an overnight train and then a bus to get there."

But when he arrived, things weren't what he expected. "I was quite honestly underwhelmed at the lack of damage compared to what I had seen and heard through the media. The wave that hit Phuket was about 4 meters high."

He decided to ask people where the hardest-hit area was. "I received the same answer from each one—Khu Lak."

Devastation

The very next day, he rode a bus to Khu Lak. "That's where I saw the devastation. The wave that hit Khu Lak was 11 meters high and traveled 10 kilometers inland in places. The destruction was unlike that which I had ever seen."

Immediately after his arrival, Mickey started working with the Tsunami Volunteer Center and hasn't stopped since. He took the plunge into life in Khu Lak.

"Every moment of every day has been an unforgettable story. A year's worth of television massacres' day and night would not even begin to scratch the surface. 80 percent of families lost a family member. Many lost all that they owned. Currently, 6,000 men, women and children live in temporary camps in the area—all who lived in homes before the tragedy. The tremendous economic loss, which has had serious ripple effects, has added to the grief and human loss suffered here," he says.

Mickey has witnessed the Thai quick rise from the tragedy. "I must say that in the five or six weeks that I have been here, each day I have seen another business reopen, more people in the shops and restaurants, and more traffic on the roads. The first week I was in Khu Lak, I sat in a restaurant for two hours one evening and was the only customer. In the same restaurant three weeks later, I counted 34 customers as I sat and ate. It made me feel like Khu Lak was indeed renewing itself. The area and its people are moving forward every day."

Loss and grief

Loss is not a new thing for Mickey, whose life changed after the September 11 attacks in New York. A native of New York, having grown up on Long Island for 17 years, he was at another place when the attack occurred, but witnessed the towers fall on live television. The event affected him deeply.

During that time, he was running a successful business, had four employees under him and was remodeling a 110-year-old property that he bought in Allentown, New Mexico.

But he lost all that. "All of that slipped away from me and slipped into a deep hole caused by the 9/11 tragedy. I stayed in that trough for over two years, giving up friends and basically my entire life to grief."

It is his own sense of loss that gives him the strength to continue helping people in Thailand. "Having been well familiar with how grief can be the sympathy I believe, needed to treat my kind of loss here is extremely important."

Originally, Mickey had intended to stay for a month. But last Feb. 22, his return ticket expired, becoming just another piece of paper, thanks to a no-change policy implemented by the website that sold him his ticket.

"Obviously I have to fight back to the future, but I am hoping that will take care of itself when the time comes for me to leave this beautiful country."

He is currently working on the 100 Days Tsunami Memorial, a festival that draws its name from the Thai belief that on the 100th day after death, the grieving for lost souls is to cease, because that's when the soul is liberated from its former life to pass onto the next.

Mickey's role has been to coordinate the event through the necessary governmental processes and media systems in their aim to attract those affected that there's an opportunity to gather in an international community and to share in the moving forward of all those lives affected.

Other volunteers are currently involved in artist and performer coordination, international Tsunami Village construction and workshops coordination. The three-day weekend which starts April 4 and ends April 6 will feature events revolving around the Hope, Spirit and Renewal theme. There will be art, music and dance performers, along with survivor's expressions of spirit.

How to help

In the recent Recovery Andaman Forum, Mickey stood up and told an audience of 800 journalists and travel agents from all over the world about the project. When the forum was over, people crowded around him, asking for more information and offering help.

And there are many ways by which people could help. The Tsunami Volunteers website (www.tsunamivolunteers.com) has a lot of information for those wishing to volunteer.

Right now, there are over 120 volunteers from all over the world at the Tsunami Volunteer Center in Khu Lak. Since late December, over 600 individuals have arrived from all parts of the globe to help. Many of these people were people who were turned away by larger relief organizations because what they can contribute is "unskilled assistance." These people found a place in Khu Lak and the Volunteer Center.

These volunteers pay for their own accommodations and food stays while the Center operates on private donations in their aim to accomplish their goals.

According to Mickey, everyone is welcome to help.

"We will not refuse an individual motivated to helping and who is willing to give himself to these efforts. There is no wrong way to share goodness—and goodness is priceless."

If you want to help, visit my country'

WHEN tragedy hits a tourism-dependent region, sending arrival numbers to drop, tour guides feel the impact.

Central "Klang" Arayapong, a tour guide who was born and raised in Phuket, experienced that during last year's tsunami. Instead of wallowing, Klang decided to make herself useful and took a head-first plunge into the rescue efforts.

She was on Patong Beach on the day of the disaster. "I saw low tide and I asked people to run away. Big waves came three times and the last one was terrible," she said.

That very same day, she jumped into action. "I decided to bring water to the Phuket Provincial Hall because I heard some victims from Phi Phi Island didn't have water to drink. Then I went to Vachira Hospital to help some victims and their relatives."

Soon, Klang realized her ability to speak English would benefit a lot of people. The next day, she went to Khu Lak, the hardest-hit area, and helped in the search for bodies, which was emotional for her.

In the middle of January, she started working with the British Embassy and the Phuket Provincial Hall as their link for information. She helped victims who had lost all their money and their passports in the tragedy.

Tourism weren't the only ones affected. A lot of Klang's friends had lost their jobs as a result of the tragedy. Tourism canceled planned trips to the affected areas of Thailand, lowering the demand for tour guides.

Although tourism have started to pick up again, a lot of the tour guides are helping with the renovation and reconstruction efforts in the affected areas.

Many of them, including Klang, also worked with the Tourism Authority of Thailand during the recent Recovery Andaman Steps from Time which brought in 800 journalists and travel agents from all over the world.

Klang was assigned to the Philippine contingent and spent four days with us.

She has one thing to say to people who think Thailand has forgotten too quickly and that it is recovering too fast: "We need to keep remembering. Keep in mind that there's no need to talk all the time. If we just talk all the time, we cannot stay alone."

Klang has a lot of love for her country. It is evident in everything she says and does. She stresses that if people want to help her country, all they have to do is visit.

"Visit Phuket, Krabi, Chiang Mai, Bangkok and Pattaya. Eat green curry, tom yam, pad thai, seafood and papaya salad. Shop, visit the Grand Palace in Bangkok, learn Thai culture and drink," she says.

Yes, Thailand is on its way to recovery. And the future seems even brighter for the Land of Smiles, thanks to people like Klang.
